Do You See?

Step into our "Home" and explore the intersectionality of young voices echoing through the illustrated walls telling stories of home, family and a sustainable dream.

Through this installation project, I hope to awaken that enigmatic part of the human mind that is always responsible to do good work.

Invites introspection into our actions vs consequences, our aspirations vs realities and our power to shape a responsible future, one choice at a time.

"The Bucket List" by M - The structure represents the mind, a creation of our own, and we are under the open weather of life.

People cleaning up garbage are my forever heroes, contributing to environmental beauty. Kudos to these scavengers, turning waste into decoration, like true superheroes.

The Panchbhutas represent the five elements of Earth, Water, Fire, Air, & Space.

This installation probes into environmental pollution from the manufacturing of fake greenery. The word "Plants" also refers to toxic "Chemical Plants" and paradoxically exposes the deception in the name of green trends in design.

An interactive installation for the blind features a braille-inscribed poem and uses indigo as a metaphor for natural darkness. Questions visual bias in art and public spaces, encouraging engagement as the color changes with body heat.
