THE ART DISTRICT

Mumbai's iconic Kala Ghoda precinct, owes its name to the statue of King Edward VII. In 1879, it was polished to a black finish and this bronze statue gave rise to the name "Kala Ghoda," meaning "Black Horse."

In 1965, amidst rising nationalistic sentiments, the statue was relocated to the Byculla Zoo. For decades, the precinct stood without a statue, yet the name endured as a testament to its history. In 2017, the area welcomed a new symbol: The Spirit of Kala Ghoda, a striking riderless black horse that pays homage to its past while embracing its vibrant present. Installed by the Kala Ghoda Association, this new statue now anchors the heart of a thriving cultural district. The precinct, with its rich tapestry of heritage buildings, art galleries, museums, educational institutions, boutiques, cafes, and restaurants, has become one of Mumbai's most celebrated tourist and cultural hubs. Drawing visitors from around the world, Kala Ghoda seamlessly blends its colonial history with contemporary charm.

The statue of King Edward VII near Prince of Wales Museum

The Spirit of Kala Ghoda

Through the efforts of the Kala Ghoda Association—supported by funds from the Kala Ghoda Arts Festival and generous sponsors—the area has undergone remarkable transformation. Historic buildings and facades have been meticulously restored, and amenities thoughtfully improved. These initiatives, since 1999, have preserved Kala Ghoda's unique visual identity, ensuring it remains a vibrant and enduring cultural landmark.

Shimmering Stallion:
White Lippan Horse

A majestic white horse installation with reflective Lippan Kaam using mirrors to show the connection of clay and sustainability as the main theme.

Tanvi Negandhi and Aditya Posnak

Geostitch stallion

From crocheted heritage horse to geometric public form, the installation traces tradition, abstraction, adaptation, and sustainable futures

Arzan Khambatta

SEE BUT LOVELY

Is a sculpture of a running horse carrying the skin of the Indian truck, layered with colour, humour, misspellings, and roadside wisdom, each painted motif borrows from journeys made slowly, now stretched onto a form that refuses to stand still.
